BUSINESS IS FAN-TASTIC

SO, you thought you had heard everything.

Then allow us to introduce Mindy Greenfield and Lissa Negrin who turn an honest buck — as professional fans.

They will shout, scream, faint, beg for autographs and applaud for anyone who hires their Los Angeles-based Rent-A-Fan service.

The idea came to Mindy, 26, and Lissa, 28, on their way to the airport to pick up a friend six years ago.

“We went into the airport and started screaming, ‘There she is, there she is, Marilyn Wilson,’” Lissa says.

“People started asking her for her autograph even though they didn’t know who she was. I guess they weren’t about to take a chance and miss a real celebrity.”

Cindy and Mindy, as they bill themselves, learn all they can, including anecdotes of their particular “celebrity,” and bombard him or her with these facts during the short skit. Real celebrities have actually hired them to surprise friends. But things don’t always go as planned. When actress Sally Struthers hired Cindy and Mindy to fawn over her favorite designer, “he hid behind the clothing racks and wouldn’t come out,” Lissa says.

“I guess that he was just a little embarrassed.”
